Crash raises safety questions about Marines' new aircraft

By Michelle Nadeau
Associated Press

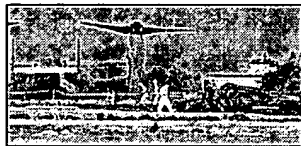

MARIANA, Ariz. — A Marine Corps aircraft attempting to land during a nighttime training mission crashed and burst into flames, killing all 19 aboard and sending to a charred husk for a new level of safety questions about the new aircraft.

The MV-22 Osprey, which looks like a helicopter, is part of a new generation of aircraft scheduled to eventually replace the Marine primary troop-transport helicopter. The military began flying the aircraft six months ago.

The four crew members in Saturday night's crash were from a tank crew headquarters in Quantico, Va. The passengers were 14 Marines from 3rd Battalion, 5th Marine based at Camp Pendleton, Calif., and one from Marine Corps Air Station-Miramar in San Diego County, according to the Marine Corps. None of the victims was listed as being from Indiana.

On Sunday, investigators were reviewing the crash site at Marine Corps Air Station-Miramar, northwest of Tucson. Two details were released.

Card Ward, who lives about 10 miles from the airport, said he watched the plane fly by from his porch. It disappeared behind a mountain, and a few seconds later, "I saw the smoke and the big old pool," she said.

At least 19 people were killed in the crash of a Marine Corps MV-22 Osprey at Marine Corps Air Station-Miramar, northwest of Tucson, Ariz. The crash occurred Saturday night.

19 die in crash

An MV-22 Osprey crashed in southern Arizona Saturday night, killing all 19 aboard.

The hybrid aircraft, which can take off and land like a helicopter, was carrying 19 Marines and crew members. The crash occurred about 10 miles from the airport, said Card Ward, who lives about 10 miles from the airport, said he watched the plane fly by from his porch. It disappeared behind a mountain, and a few seconds later, "I saw the smoke and the big old pool," she said.

The crash is again raising questions about the safety of the aircraft, which has been more than a decade in the making.

President George W. Bush's administration is to accelerate the project after early safety concerns, but military officials say the aircraft is still in development. One of the Marine Corps' other Osprey crashes, both early in the aircraft's development. One in 1991 in Arkansas, was blamed on captain Thomas of Fort Worth, Texas, and Irving Co. in Dallas Park, Pa. The Osprey can achieve speeds of more than 400 mph and an altitude of 25,000 feet. It is designed to carry up to 24 troops or combat loads of 15,000 pounds.

The hybrid aircraft flies at a speed that is twice the speed of a conventional helicopter. The aircraft is expected to be delivered by 2014 at a cost of $44 million each, said Capt. Rich Whelan, a Pentagon spokesman.

The Marine Corps' other Osprey crash, both early in the aircraft's development. One in 1991 in Arkansas, was blamed on
